Check-In 8 am to 9 am

About the conference:

Dr. Mel Levine Director, Bringing Up Minds

Dr. Mel Levine will present an approach to learning disorders that is highly specific in pinpointing where the breakdown is occurring when a student struggles with a particular aspect of academic performance. He will focus on critical phenomena that are not captured on tests but are evident when a parent, teacher, or clinician knows what he or she is looking for! These will include a range of organizational deficiencies, difficulties with recurrent pattern recognition, insidious memory dysfunctions, and festering language shortfalls. Dr Levine will describe practical tactics for classroom and home management that emerge from detection of these phenomena. He will also talk about the critical importance of “diagnosing,” “treating,” and utilizing fully a child’s underlying strengths and affinities.

About the presenter

Dr. Levine and All Kinds of Minds have been featured nationally on Oprah, CNN and the Today Show, in USA Today, Newsweek, The New York Times, Newsday, The Washington Post, Child and Teacher Magazine, as well as many other publications.

All Kinds of Minds, co-founded by Dr. Levine, helps families, educators, and clinicians understand why a child is struggling in school and provides an action plan to help each child become a more successful learner. The Institute provides the Schools Attuned Program, which prepares educators to meet the diverse learning needs of all students in their classroom, and the Student Success Program, to help families understand why a student is struggling in school and provide individualized action plan to help the student succeed in school and in life.
